THE WIFE INTERRUPTED.

Damaged the Plumage of Her Hasband's Feminine Admirer.

At 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon a well dressed man stood at the corner of Penn-sylvania Avenue and Thirteen-and-ahalf Street, apparently in waiting for some one. He became uneasy as time larged and now and then he walked up and down the street. That morning he had received a letter, bearing a Baltimore postmark, which rend something like this Deer Jake: Eleanor and I are coming over saturday and are going down to Alexandria be a lark. We will be back in Washington about a clock. Meet us at the Mount Vernon station, Lovingly, JESSIE.

By accident the note fell into the hand of Mrs. 'Jake,' the wife of the man who stood upon the corner warring. She cirrily replaced it in her husband's coat, and said never a word. She did act, however. Shortly before 5 o'clock she engaged a carriage and told the driver to take her to the cab stand at Pennsylvania Avenne and Thirteen-und-a-half Street where she said she desired to wait for some ladies who were coming up from Alexandria. The electric train came in on time the two Bailimore girls alighted, and Jes-sie, having sighted "Jake" as he store across the street, started toward him Her face was wreathed in smiles and she waved her hand coquettishly, "Jake"

Suddenly a carriage dashed down Peni sylvania Avenue and drove between the orner. When it reached a point directly in front of Jessele and Eleanor an info corner. When it reached a point directly in front of Jessie and Eleanor an inturiated woman leaped out without waiting for the vehicle to come to a stop. It was Mrs. "Jake." In an instant both her hands were intermingled with the soft, dark tresses of the girl from the Monumental City, and judging from the screams of the latter the assession must have been impleasant. Then Mrs. "Jake" passed her fingers over the face of the Baltimore beauty and left long, red scratches. Not satisfied with that treatment, she fore the plumage from the hat of the young woman and made her silk waist look as though it had been run through a corn sheller.

Miss Jessie was so completely taken by surprise that she could not resist the attack. Her companion, however, very much frightened, ran into the railway depot and there hid herself until the storm had passed.

Meanwhile "fake" stood upon the corner watching the encounter in anything but the happy mood which had characterized his appearance a few minutes previous. Finally, he rushed out into the street, separated the female belligerents, and placed Mrs. "Jake" in a carriage. He took a seat beside her and told the man on the box to drive on burriedly.

Policemen Catts and Cramer came in just me was called and the runned dassisted the vanquished conhatant to the depot, where she quickly decided to take
